Speeding Fine Leaps Up, Up As Driver Spouts $5 Words

MILWAUKEE — A Milwaukee motorist talked himself into a fine — at $5 a sentence.
Charles Olecik was charged with speeding 40 miles an hour across a viaduct. He argued that the patrolman who arrested him couldn't have clocked him properly.
The judge heard both sides and accepted the patrolman's testimony. "Ten dollars and cost," he ruled.
"But, judge," Olecik said. "The officer was too far back to clock me."
"Fifteen dollars and costs," said the judge.
"But, your honor," said Olecik, "I waited a long time at a stoplight before the officer came along."
"Twenty dollars and costs," said the judge.
"I still say that he was too far back," said Olecik.
"Twenty-five dollars and costs," said the judge.
Olecik still argued, but the judge didn't raise the fine. He had reached the maximum.

Swing Bridge Runs Wild As Tender Dies at Post

KANSAS CITY — A swinging bridge over the Missouri river ran wild for an hour when the tender, William E. Koon, died at the controls.
Automobiles jammed on the approaches. An airline pilot and some plane passengers, among the stranded motorists, missed flights from the Kansas City airport. Two railroad locomotives were halted.
The structure was the 81-year-old Hannibal Bridge, one of two that carry traffic from Kansas City north over the Missouri. The span was opened for a tugboat and when the tender died at the controls it continued to swing.
After an hour watching the runaway bridge, three young men from cars in the traffic jam jumped aboard and smashed the controls stopping the swinging span.

New Apparatus Makes Barnacles Commit Suicide

LA JOLLA, Calif.—Henry T. Burkey, an inventor, has developed a shocking device which causes mussels and barnacles to commit suicide. It may someday save ship owners and seashore industries millions a year.
The apparatus is essentially a series of vacuum tubes which generate timed electrical pulses in water. The pulses, too weak to electrocute the sea creatures, forces them to suicide.
In the case of the bivalve mussels, the current causes their shells to snap shut. Continuing pulses cause a muscular reaction which keeps them shut. Death occurs when the mussel either starves or is unable to eliminate wastes, succumbs to auto-intoxication.
In a test all of a group of 100 mussels exposed to the pulses died within two weeks. Seventy died within one week.

Applies for Patents

The single-shelled barnacles, says Burkey, are equally vulnerable. They eat by fishing about in the water with tiny feelers. Preliminary tests indicate that the pulses paralyze these feelers.
Millions of dollars are spent annually to scrape barnacles from the hulls of vessels ranging in size from battleships to rowboats. Burkey says his apparatus can be rigged so it will not only kill barnacles already present but prevent further accumulations.
He has already applied for patents on an adaptation of the device designed to clear underwater pipelines.
Power plants, oil refineries and other industrial plants near the oceans use sea water for cooling machinery. The huge pipes through which the water is drawn quickly become lined with clogging mussels.
A New England power station, he says, removes 300 tons of shells annually from its intake lines. A San Diego plant with four-by-eight-foot intake tunnels found after an inspection that the intake line was coated with two feet of mussels. This reduced its amount of salable electricity by $25,000 yearly.

Present Methods Expensive

Systems using water hot enough to kill the bivalves, or slaughtering them by heavy chlorination, have proved to be extremely costly, he says.
The microscopic mussel eggs, which are fertilized while they float in the water, attach themselves to some solid object after 4½ hours. If they find no such object, they die. They cling by means of sticky threads and a single "foot," which must be protruded.
One of the many effects of the jolts of current is to make it impossible for the mussels to stick this neckline foot out.

Toy Bridge Plays Important Part in Construction Work

PRINCETON, N. J. — A toy bridge, replica of a 312-foot section of the $40,000,000 Delaware memorial suspension bridge under construction near Wilmington, is playing an important part in the construction work.
The model's dimensions are 28 feet in length, 20 inches deep and 61 inches wide. It weighs 600 pounds. Every rivet and connection that will appear in the Delaware bridge has been reproduced in detail.
Construction of the 26-foot model was promoted by the failure of the famous "Galloping Gertie" the Tacoma Narrows suspension bridge that snapped in half in a storm. "Galloping Gertie" could not withstand the twisting caused by the wind and its uneven weight distribution.
So far the construction of the model and the tests have cost $4,000. The miniature is subjected to various loads which produce twisting. Engineers then alternate the system of horizontal bracings to determine which give the greatest stiffness. The stiffer the span is, the less will be the tendency to rotate. Tests indicate that by using braces across both the top and bottom, stiffness can be increased about 20 times.
The Delaware bridge was begun in 1949 and is scheduled for completion next summer. Located in the southern end of the New Jersey turnpike, the 2,150-foot suspended span will be the fifth largest such bridge in the world.

Chess Game Uninterrupted As Firemen Battle Blaze

NEW YORK—Even a fire could not budge the chess players. Fifteen of them were playing at a midtown chess and checker emporium.
In rushed an alarmist, crying, "Gentlemen, there's a fire on the roof." No one looked up from the boards.
"Gentlemen, there's a fire on the roof," the alarmist repeated. Firemen raced through the room with hose.
"Don't disturb the board, mister," a player called to a fireman as he moved his bishop. The fire was extinguished in 10 minutes.

Royalties From Play Finances London Hospital

LONDON, England — Sir James Barrie, the playwright, lived up to children so much he gave all the royalties from his fairy tale play Peter Pan to a children's hospital in his home town. When he died he made the royalties a perpetual bequest.
Because of that gift, the Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children is known as Peter Pan Hospital. It has been made richer by 100,000 pounds ($280,000) — and the money keeps coming in.
Peter Pan and his playmates, the Darling children, Captain Hook and all the other inhabitants of fairy land—have helped the nation run the hospital to build one of the finest, most modern hospital buildings in the world. They also help to pay for research by doctors and skilled technicians to study the costly and baffling diseases that strike at children.
Some of the money this year is coming from the pockets of Americans whose reverence for Sir James has made a revival of Peter Pan a current Broadway success.

Constructies De'ayed

When the author died in 1937 the hospital was building a new wing on the site of the old one in London's Bloomsbury district. It is not yet finished and probably won't be for a number of years. Building material shortages, then a change in plans, have held up the work.
The war stopped contracts after the seven-story hospital building had been completed. That a many-windowed, R-shaped building with balconies running around every floor.
There are 326 beds, with about 40 nurses to look after the young ters night and day. There are a staff doctors and 30 consulting specialists who visit the hospital almost daily.
In addition there are another 100 beds at the hospital's country branch, a former large private home on a 75-acre estate at Barworty, Surrey, about 20 miles south of London. Then there are two convalescent homes with 18 beds each —one at the seashore near Brighton and another in rural Oxfordshire.
The royalties from Peter Pan help run all these, as does the government, which took over the control of virtually all British hospitals a few years ago.

Government Pays Part

Because the hospital for sick children is a teaching hospital, its funds do not come under the control of the Health Ministry, but are administered by the hospital authorities solely for research and treatment. The government pays all maintenance costs.
There is a Peter Pan ward—for eye, ear, nose and throat cases. Like the other wards, it is gaily painted and cheerful. There is a miniature surgery for each unit of eight beds. Every unit also has a playroom, with rocking horse, fire engines, trains and dolls for convalescent patients.
Every Christmas season Peter Pan is presented in one of the London theaters. And members of the cast pay an annual visit to the wards to entertain the children.
In the Peter Pan ward is a plaque that reads:
"Dedicated to the never-ending memory of one who loved children —Sir James Barrie."

Outbound Flier Bestows Automobile on Stranger

ATLANTA, Ga.—M/Sgt. John E. Cameron was given an automobile by a stranger.
One Air Force sergeant on the flight line at Dobbins field relied to another, "Hey, Sarge!"
Sgt. Cameron walked over to the man.
"You're gonna think I'm crazy, but see that car over there? It's yours. I've got a plane to catch and I won't be back for awhile."
With that the stranger handed Sergeant Cameron the keys and title papers, boarded a plane and flew off into the wild blue yonder.
The amazed sergeant checked the registration papers on the 1947 model automobile and the stranger's passenger list, and found the donor was Sgt. Antonio C. Germano, bound for overseas.
Sergeant Cameron said he was going to keep the car. And he said going to keep the car. And he said "I'm going to give it to the last GI I see before pulling out."

Churchill Paintings Appear On Christmas Greeting Cards

NEW YORK—Winston Churchill paintings will appear on Christmas greeting cards this year.
Twenty paintings by Mr. Churchill for reproduction on cards have been selected by a greeting card company. Another group, including two holy land scenes, a sunset over Jerusalem, and a village landscape, have been selected for next year.
Joyce C. Hall, who selected the paintings, said: "Mr. Churchill is a very vigorous painter. His work is surprisingly professional, and he has done a lot of painting. There are several hundred which he did while he was in his country home and at his London house. And there is a stack of others that he doesn't rate highly."

U.S. Women Harming Teeth With Bobby Pins
BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. S. S. Livingston reports that American women are causing great damage to their teeth with bobby pins.
The reason, women roll up their hair, hold it with one hand and then holding a bobby pin in the other, open it with their teeth.
A simple homemade device for opening bobby pins is to place as many pins as are needed for the hairdo around the rim of a drinking glass. With the flat side of the bobby pin facing the inside of the glass, one can pick off each bobby pin, already open—and the teeth need not be used.
Dangerous to Teeth
Besides opening bobby pins with their teeth, many girls are forming the dangerous habit of digging between their teeth with hairpins, bobby pins, common pins and toothpicks. Some do it to remove food; others, because they are nervous.
Toothpicks in one form or another have been in use probably for thousands of years. They are traceable to A. D. 23, when their use was first recorded. They were used in the Roman, Grecian and Chinese periods of history.
Various materials have been utilized—gold, silver, ivory, quills and now wood. It was a custom in colonial days for the luxurious host to offer his dinner guest an expensive gold or silver toothpick after his meal.
Chips Enamel
Today toothpicks are usually made of hard wood, such as birch or maple. Soft wood is avoided by manufacturers because it tends to fuzz and splinter, shedding slivers in the mouth when used.
Dr. Livingston says the bobby pin may add to feminine hair beauty, but they have come to be serious threats to the dental charm of the girl who uses her teeth to open them. When a girl opens a bobby pin with her front teeth, she usually chips or breaks off the biting edge of her teeth. The tooth enamel microscopically is made up of enamel rods, just like the bricks that go to make up a brick house. Once these enamel rods begin to chip, they continue to break off until a part of the crown surface of the tooth is destroyed.

Uncle Sam Says

A lot of folks are tempted to speculate with their money. With the farmers, however, there's enough speculation in farming itself—what with the weather, insects, plant disease, livestock sickness, and prices. For the farmers, a safe, sure way of building financial security is with U. S. Savings Bonds. Should he need extra cash his money is handy, it's always there for emergencies. So, farmers, be sure that part of your fall crop or livestock check goes into Savings Bonds. They pay $4 for every $3 invested in ten short years. This is the time to resolve—"NOW LET'S ALL BUY BONDS."
